Yesterday I woke up at 5:30am, left my house at 6am, drove 1 hour to my university, worked for 8 hrs, went to class for 6hrs, and then drove back home 1 hour. That's a 16 hour work day.

Why? Because I am DEDICATED to my own success.

Exclusivity bred loyalty, which became crucial: labor was in short supply. Employers encouraged employees to feel commitment and obligation with stable pay, health insurance, and promotions for good performances

a tacit bargain

Corporations wanted to encourage loyalty in their workers, and workers understood that it was a valuable quality that they brought to the bargaining table.

GRANT EIGHT-HOUR DAY AT $5 WAGE

Two Shifts of Nine Hours Changed to Three of Eight, 4,000 Unemployed to Be Taken In—Jobs on Farms Arranged During Black Season.

The Ford Motor Co. will give to its employees during the year of 1934 the sum of $15,000,000 in addition to their wages.

This will not be a wage increase, but a distribution of profits. It will be added, however, automatically, to the pay envelopes of the men. In 1933, the distribution might be more or less than $15,000,000, dependent on business conditions.

A minimum wage of $7 a day will be established by the addition of the profit distribution to wages. The present minimum wage in the great motor car factory is $2.50. From next Monday to the end of the year, more the highest salaried and the men who merely change the tires, will get at least $7 a day.

Further, the 11-hour day is shortened. To prevent the Boundaries

The self-as-property implied a sharp boundary between your work and your personal life. When you quit working you were getting your “self ” back; you were no longer rented out to your employer and your employer had no rights over your behavior when the workday was done.

(exception: Ford's Sociological Department)

Self as business

People now think they own themselves as though they are businesses— bundles of skills, assets, qualities, experiences, and relationships, bundles that must be consciously managed and constantly enhanced. As the CEO of Me Inc., to be employable you must represent yourself as a business of one, willing to temporarily assist other, larger businesses. From this perspective, hiring resembles a business- to-business contract, a short- term connection for solving market-specific problems.

used to refer to manual or mechanical knowledge (sewing or plumbing), now anything that can be tested or ranked can be considered a skill. Things like communication, which we do to exist, have become a workplace skill that experts can teach and that some people can do measurably better than others: how well someone listens at a meeting, or speaks French, or runs Photoshop, even if these are all very different acts of communication.

Abilities that don't seem linked to each other are all lumped under the category of skills as something that people (business) possess, and the degree to which they possess these skills can be objectively evaluated and compared with other people's abilities.

Self-as-business: skills in conflict

Java, C++ and intellectual property in the Bay Area, 2008

Resumes and CVs

In the Self-as-Property, this is a straightforward list of your previous experiences, a historical record of your abilities. You list where you have worked and what you are capable of doing. If there is a strategy, it is a strategy of omission: you only left a job off your resume if it might genuinely harm you to allow potential employers to know that you had had this job, for whatever reason.

Resumes and CVs now

Resumes are no longer a historical record; they are now a specifically-tailored marketing document.

Rather than listing the abilities you demonstrated at a previous job, you describe the business results finessed at different jobs that might be applicable to the particular job you are applying for, especially if those business results can be described using some form of metrics.

Resumes present you as a bundle of business solutions: they are part of a negotiation in which two businesses are considering entering into a specific alliance.

Since staying with a single company is no longer valued, people are switching jobs so often, and changing what they do in each job, people have to craft a coherent narrative about their work history for recruiters.

everyone to talk about their skills. If a woman told Ramina that she was one of the best drug dealers in her neighborhood, Ramina would respond enthusiastically: “Let’s take that illegal element out of it and let’s focus on your skills. What did it take to make someone trust you over and over to come in and buy drugs from you?” The woman might explain how good she was with customer service—she was honest. If another parolee, say a man, wasn’t a former drug dealer but a former drug user, Ramina would ask him how he knew which drug dealer to approach. He might tell her that he was particularly good at reading people, and she would encourage him to note that skill. Ramina asked parolees to distinguish between the

Skills, CVs, and LinkedIn

LinkedIn profiles must be as general as possible, to allow you to connect to as many jobs as possible.

This can involve including details that resumes, limited as they are to one or two pages, don't contain. If you have in fact managed to become the flexible, multiskilled self that the self-as-business logic requires, you risk seeming too incoherent, too scattered on your LinkedIn profile.

Now that everything is a skill, that everyone's a self-business, and that anyone can find jobs anywhere, advertised job openings often have too many applicants. To deal with all the applications, companies use automated mechanisms, applicant-tracking systems, to select the most likely candidates.

Dear Juan,

Thank you for your patience since your interview for the job of Assistant Professor in our department.

I'm very sorry to say that we have offered the job to another candidate and they have accepted.

Thank you so much for the time you put into the long recruitment process. We really enjoyed reading your excellent and original work, and talking with you at the interview. Although I'm sure you will be disappointed, you can take pride in the fact that you were one of only 5 people interviewed out of 213 applicants.

The Job Market Is Hell

Young people are using ChatGPT to write their applications; HR is using AI to read them; no one is getting hired.

By Annie Lowrey

If the job description asks for someone with experience building international teams and the applicant mentions managing global teams instead, that person runs the risk of being rejected by a poorly programmed applicant tracking system.

The hiring manager may be willing to hire someone with four years of experience instead of five when faced with a promising enough candidate. But the applicant-tracking system will be programmed to eliminate anyone with less than five years of experience at a certain job.

In the tech world, if the applicant tracking system happens to be programmed to only select people who have three to five years of experience with a particular technology or programming language, but the technology or language was only developed two years ago.

Networking now is essential, and constant, to bypass the problems created by job boards and applicant-tracking systems and get recruiters, HR people, or hiring managers to notice one's resume.
