Yesterday I woke up at 5:30am, left my house at 6am, drove 1 hour to my university, worked for 8 hrs, went to class for 6hrs, and then drove back home 1 hour. That's a 16 hour work day.

Why? Because I am DEDICATED to my own success.

TLDR: If you feel stagnant in your current situation, you should consider taking potential risks and the returns it could bring in.

In a world driven by constant innovation and intense competition, staying too long in a single company can sometimes hinder both your personal and professional growth.

INVESTMENT IN HUMAN CAPITAL*

By THEODORE W. SCHULTZ

Although it is obvious that people acquire useful skills and knowledge, it is not obvious that these skills and knowledge are a form of capital, that this capital is in substantial part a product of deliberate investment, that it has grown in Western societies at a much faster rate than conventional (nonhuman) capital, and that its growth may well be the most distinctive feature of the economic system. It has been widely observed that increases in national output have been large compared with the increases of land, man-hours, and physical reproducible capital. Investment in human capital is probably the major explanation for this difference.

Labour vs. Capital

What defines the labouring self

CAPITALISM

Labour towards Capital

“Although it is obvious that people acquire useful skills and knowledge, it is not obvious that these skills and knowledge are a form of capital, that this capital is in substantial part a product of deliberate investment, that it has grown in Western societies at a much faster rate than conventional (nonhuman) capital, and that its growth may well be the most distinctive feature of the economic system. It has been widely observed that increases in national output have been large compared with the increases of land, man-hours, and physical reproducible capital. Investment in human capital is probably the major explanation for this difference”

Beyond unions, institutions, rights and so on - we are all able (and expected) to do a work of investing in ourselves – of becoming capitalists

Break

These strands converge in the Entrepreneurial Self

self-sufficient; self-appreciating;
self-optimizing; self-actualizing;
flexible; independent; malleable;
goal-oriented; prone to self-evaluation, benchmarking and milestone-setting; adaptive; performative...

More than workers, bosses, consumers, producers or anything else, these selves are eminently entrepreneurs who learn to see and understand themselves (their bodies, their minds, their personalities, their histories) as an alterable set of assets.

Managers of a portfolio of conducts pertaining to all the aspects of their lives.

Reframe How You Think About Self-Care

by Liane Davey

August 3, 2020, Updated August 20, 2020

You need the energy to be fully present even as you're fretting about the 72 emails piling up in your in-box. You need the patience to be empathetic when facing resistance from your employees. You need the self-control to be open and vulnerable without losing your team's confidence.

Few (managers) make investments to bolster energy and stamina. Sufficient sleep, proper nutrition, physical exercise, human connection, and time to relax are important, but do you carve out time for them? Or do you tell yourself, "It's so busy, I can't afford to (...)" That framing, which casts investments in your resilience as contrary to the best interests of your organization, is doing both you and your organization a great disservice.

If you are an important asset, how could depriving, devaluing, and depreciating that asset by running it in harsh conditions, powering it with improper fuel, and neglecting routine maintenance possibly be good for your organization?

You need to eat the kind of food that will fuel your prefrontal cortex, where much of a manager's action happens.

Multiple studies have shown that even mild dehydration can affect both thinking (memory and attention) and mood (tension and anxiety). Add to the list exercise and some time to relax and reflect, and you'll have the energy, patience, creativity, and endurance to successfully lead your team.

Take sleep. Before going to bed, you need to respond to the emails that came in while you were in meetings all day; you need to cut off an hour of sleep in the morning to read the material for your 8AM meeting with your boss; you have to schedule a conference call with the Hong Kong team at 11 PM.

(But) sleep loss hinders your cognitive capacity by degrading your alertness and attention. (Although stimulants like coffee) are reasonably effective at reducing the effects of sleep deprivation on standard, rule-based tasks, they are not helpful when it comes to tasks that require creativity or divergent thinking. If your organization is counting on you for more than menial, routine tasks, you might want to reconsider whether squeezing more into today is worth sacrificing what you can contribute tomorrow.

Staying ahead in a competitive era: The use of plastic surgery in career trajectory

Record your volunteering experience for better job prospects!

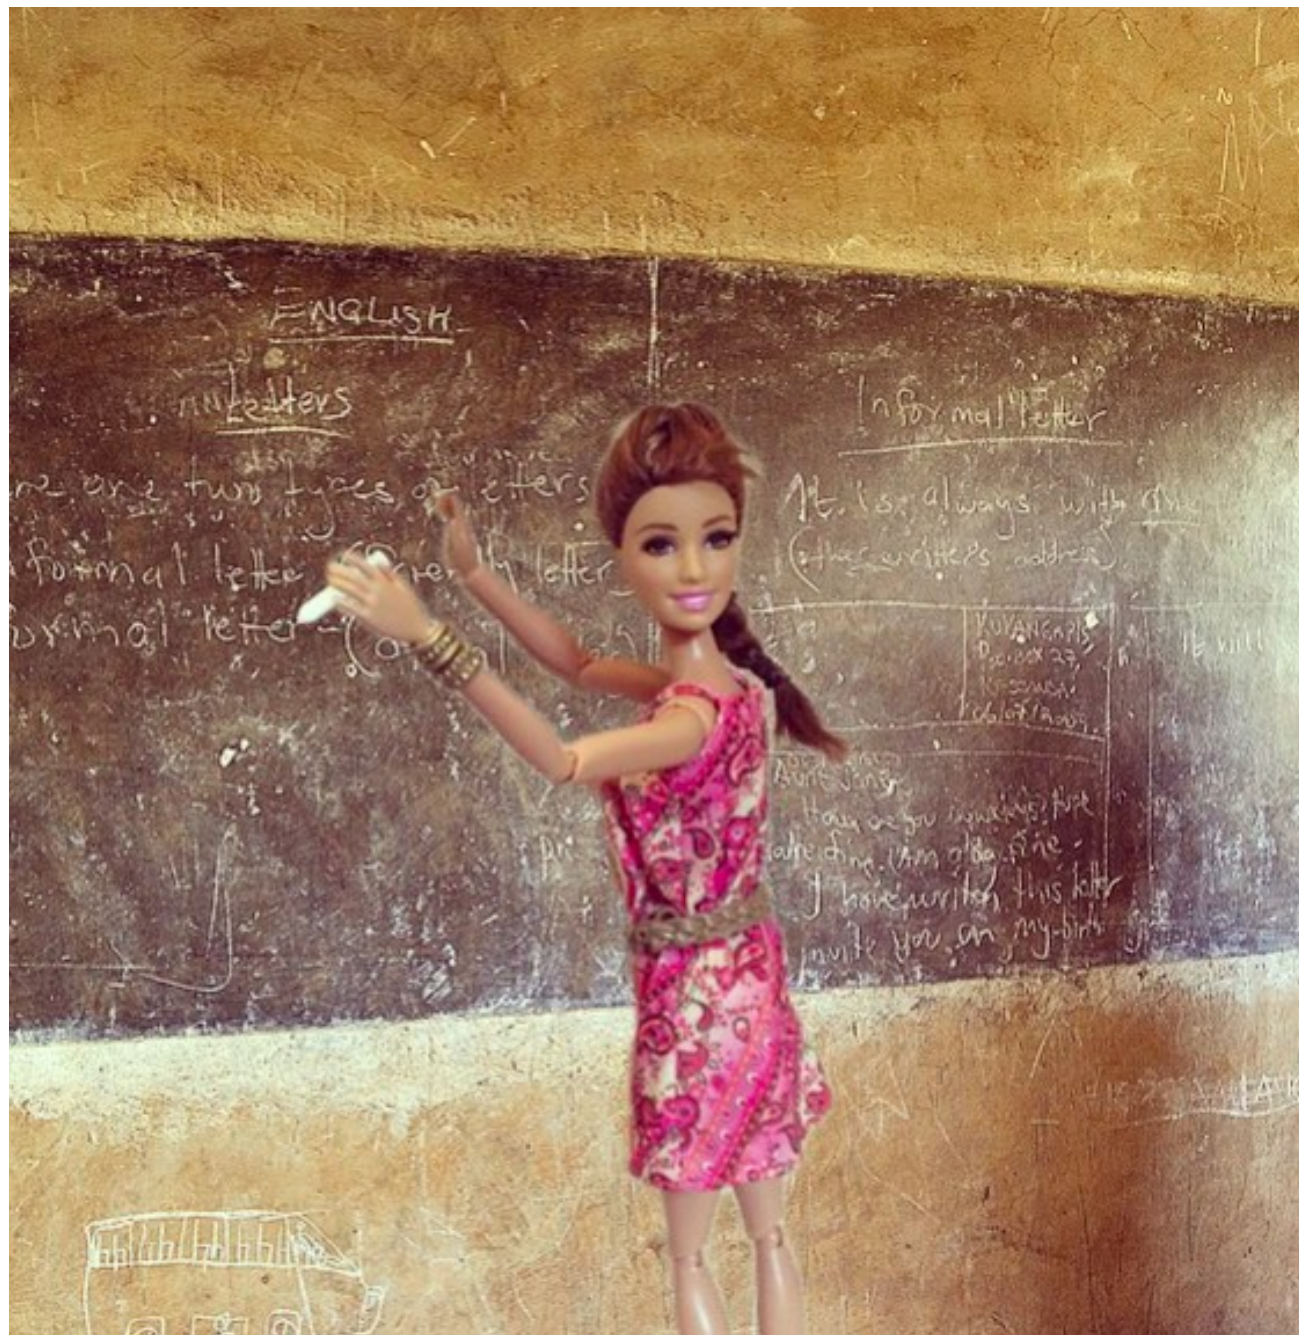

Here

For the EU, volunteering is an expression of active citizenship, a learning path and an essential activity for the development of democratic values, human dignity and equality.

Volunteering can also help you in finding your next job opportunity and the EU has created different tools to help you in the process!

Participation in a volunteering project is a significant achievement for any young person. It is an opportunity for developing social and personal competences and gaining valuable professional experience, contributing to working in multicultural teams, solving creative problems, using a foreign language in managing everyday tasks, living independently in another European country and much more.

These experiences help the participants with their personal growth, as well as with finding opportunities for their future careers and learning paths.

The problem with Entrepreneurial Selves

How do we spot them? How do we show ourselves as Entrepreneurial Selves?

How do we identify a good builder, plumber, gardener, architect, hunter, farmer, ironmonger, sailor, merchant,
chemical engineer, pharmacist, veterinarian, (programmer)?

A healthy dog, a wall, a computer programme, a successful surgery, stable chemical compounds, a good harvest, a well-looked-after boat...

How to identify a good Entrepreneurial Self (Managers, middle management, office clerks, bureaucrats, CEOs, analysts, consultants, entrepreneurs, assistants, admin staff, secretaries, marketing staff, PAs, HR staff, (and to a degree programmers, accountants, bankers, engineers)?

(How do we spot “self-sufficient, self-appreciating,
self-optimizing, self-actualizing; flexible;
independent; malleable; goal-oriented; prone to evaluation, benchmarking and milestone-setting; adaptive; performative...”?)

A whole economy of signals, performances, benchmarks, milestones, endorsements to render the self in the world
